Eating on the way

Once upon a time, two men were travelling along a road on a summer day. Iona had in his sack three loaves of bread. Stefan had in his sack two loaves. After some time, they felt hungry, so they stopped in the shade of a tree next to a well. They took their bread out of their sack, and sat to enjoy the meal and eat together. Just when they sat to eat, a third traveller, unknown to them, stopped and bid them good day. He asked to share their food, as he was very hungry, had no provisions, and there was no place to buy anything.

„Come, good man! We'll share our food with you. Where two can eat, there is always enough for a third.”
