Host the stranger

Just when they sat to eat, a third traveller, unknown to them, stopped and bid them good day. He asked to share their food, as he was very hungry, had no provisions, and there was no place to buy anything.

„Come, good man! We'll share our food with you. Where two can eat, there is always enough for a third." The stranger sat by the other two, and all three ate dry bread and drank water from the well. They ate all five loaves. The stranger took five coins, gave them to loan and said thank you: „Buy yourselves a bottle of wine, or whatever you want. Thank you for your kindness you showed me when I was very hungry." The travellers accepted the money and said goodbye to the stranger.
