Eating on the way

Once upon a time, two men, Ioan and Stefan were travelling together along a road one summer day. Ioan had three loaves of bread in his sack, Stefan, two. After some time they felt hungry and stopped in the shade of a weeping willow next to a water well. Each took the bread out of his sack, and so as to enjoy their meal more, they sat to eat together.

Just as they were taking the bread from their sacks, a third traveller, unknown to them, overtook them and, stopping beside them, bade them good day. He then asked to share their food, as he was very hungry, had no provisions, and there was no place to buy anything. “Come, good man! Share our hospitality” said the first two travellers to the stranger, “for, thank God, where two can eat, there is always enough for a third.
