PUMUCKL GOES TO SCHOOL

On his third visit to school that morning, Pumuckl came into a class that had drawing lessons. There were reeds everywhere on the tables for drawing. Pumuckl really liked that. Of course there was a teacher here too, and he said: "Take a good look at the overlaps. And not so much hatching and shading – just simple clean lines!"

Of course, Pumuckl didn't know what hatching and shading were; But make simple strokes – he could do that too! He could even draw a sailing ship with five simple strokes. He had even smeared one on the wall in the workshop, and since then Eder has always cleared away all the pencil stubs.

Pumuckl hopped over the benches, looking for a pencil so short that he could hold it in his fist. Just when he had found one, the teacher said: "Children, I have to go to the principal's office quickly. I request complete silence in my absence. Hubert – you are responsible to me for the behavior of the class."

"Yes, teacher," said Hubert. The teacher went out and it was nice and quiet for a while and all the students were drawing reeds. Then a boy shouted:

"Ui – just look, there's a chimney sweep over there on the roof. It's amazing how free from heights he is!"

Everyone watched the chimney sweep. Half of the class even ran to the window to get a closer look.

Hubert kept shouting: “Get to your seats!” When the teacher comes in!”

But the boys just laughed and shouted: “You can stand by and tell us when he’s coming!”

The children admired the chimney sweep so much that no one noticed how a stub of pencil was drawing sailing ships on this and that drawing paper. Of course, in the general confusion of shouting and talking, no one heard Pumuckl whispering delightedly: “Ooh, so much beautiful white paper! Reeds are not beautiful, ships are more beautiful. Pumuckl is a good student and draws a lot of ships. Here the deck and here the stern...”

The classroom door opened so suddenly that even Pumuckl’s pencil stub fell out of his hand in shock. The teacher stood in the doorway and looked sternly at the children.

”What’s going on here?! Hubert – didn’t I tell you to supervise the class?!”

Hubert’s face turned as red as Pumuckl had seen it with Otto and Maxl.

“I – I told them...” answered the boy.

The teacher waved him off. "I really can't leave you alone for five minutes."

"There's a chimney sweep!" said one student.

"You should not paint chimney sweeps, but reeds."

Then came the first astonished exclamation: "Who did that smear on my paper?"

And several people shouted: "I have a ship scrawled on the page!"

The teacher looked at the sheets. He shook his head: "What's with the grease? Who was that?"

Of course no one answered. The teacher sighed.
